Spring 1964. Luciano and Elena are now grandparents. But the baptism ceremony for Andrea and Francesca's first-born is disrupted by the arrival of a young mysterious Greek by the name of Rocco. Only the speedy intervention of Father Negoziante prevents the feast from turning into a tragedy. What thread links the fate of the young man and his younger sister to the Ferrucci family?

But more mysteries thicken around them. In particular that of Officer Mollica, who after arriving in Rome for the June 2 military parade and meeting Anna (for whom he has always felt deep, albeit undeclared, feelings of love) simply vanishes. Anna, who now works for the practice of her lawyer boyfriend Terenzi, investigates the case herself, to everyone's disapproval, and achieves crushing results. Andrea too goes against the tide: he has become Luciano's business partner in "Ferrucci and Son" and rebels against his father, forcing him to take the jump into the world of public tenders, a choice foreshadowing a dramatic clash between the two and never-ending difficulties. But Titti too, now free from her love disappointment with Guido thanks to an unlikely sentimental pact with a young university friend called Ernesto, creates endless problems for her parents with her defiant refusal of the rules and her eagerness for new experiences, attitudes that prompt her to escape to Barbiana to meet don Milani and then moving to Turin to take part in one of the first Italian examples of "critical university".

In a world of miniskirts and beatniks, student protests and electric guitars, the Ferrucci family seems to gradually break up under the pressure of the new lifestyles.

Her love for the kids often makes Elena understand their contradictions, passions and crushes. But, because she can read into their life choices, she ends up finding her own deepest wishes too. In the same way as Titti tries to fulfil herself beyond love, her mother tries to find emancipation as a woman through work, together with other women like herself.

Luciano, on the other hand, enters into conflict with Titti and Andrea in the name of principles he just isn't prepared to backtrack on. To him home and family have to be one and indivisible.

But yet again the most serious threat he faces comes from his ex-business partner Sartori, who, after escaping to Lebanon following his conviction for criminal bankruptcy, returns to Italy to resume business and take his revenge against Luciano. He is prepared to go to any lengths to destroy his former friend and his business by effectively exploiting the father-son conflict and using to this end Sophia, an actress willing to do anything to find financial backing or contracts and get back into the limelight.

The mystery of the obscure young man who has travelled from Greece to take his revenge against Luciano also ends up putting the two against each other once more, revealing a human conflict that goes well beyond their respective economic interests.

Who Rocco really is and the reasons for his wild project will be discovered by Titti, who is attracted by his behaviour, full of shadows but also dignity. The truth, however, ends up destabilizing her feelings and explodes like a bomb in the family.

After so many upheavals and doses of laughter too, the Ferrucci family's world eventually finds a balance. During the Florence flood the family avoids wreckage and, as The Rokes sang back then: "The rain stops and peace is back again"...

Gloria Malatesta and Claudia Sbarigia were born in Rome, in the early years of Italian TV, when kids went to bed after "Carosello", with its famous sketches for Cynar (which supposedly fought the stress of modern life) and the "Cicciobello" dolls every girl dreamt of having. A time when David Copperfield was better-known as a TV drama than a Dickens novel.

They attended the same primary school, the same "experimental" secondary school, attending the same political marches, hanging around in the same streets, film clubs and following the same screenplay course with Leo Benvenuti, to whom, they say, they owe a lot of the little they know - about writing for the screen and about life.

Among the films they've authored together, MIGNON È PARTITA by Francesca Archibugi and COMPAGNA DI VIAGGIO by Peter Del Monte are the ones they're fondest of.

As for TV, RACCONTAMI was for them a journey through memories and history, the films they loved and the 19th century feuilletons. Imaginary and real, like childish daydreams lying on a bed in the summer heat, shutters half-closed.
